MIND-READER BISHOP'S DEATH. PRINCE RUDOLPH MURDERED. He was Stricken Down While Engaged in Performing His Tricks.

Washington Irving Bishop, the mind reader, whose death was announced in yesterday's STAR, was seized with catalepsy while giving an exhibition of his powers at the Lambs club on Sunday night. He had performed his well-known dagger feat, which he concluded by pretending to stab Louis Aldrich, the actor, who occupied plots had been advanced. The latest story, one of the seats at the table. Subsequently however, is far more tragic and violent in its Mr. Bishop requested Mr. Green to think of a details than any of the preceding ones. A VICTIM OF COCAINE.

About a year ago he became a complete slave to the cocaine habit. The misery resulting from morphia or hasheesh indulgence was as nothing compared to the horror which that habit brought with it. He had married Helen G. Lord, of Boston, in 1880, and she found him, when under the influence of that drug, a perfect maniac. He abused and beat her shamefully in his delirium. Last January a fearful scene occurred between them at the Maxwell house, in Nashville, Mrs. Bishop was heard screaming terribly, and when the door was broken in she was found cowering on the floor in tears, with Bishop standing over her whip in hand. She at once began suit for absolute divorce in this city and Bishop started for the Sendwich Islands. At San Francisco he be-came unmanageable and was put in an insane asylum, where he remained several weeks, March 27 his wife got a decree of divorce. On the same day he fell before a large audience at Minneapolis in an epileptic fit and remained unconscious a whole day. Four days later he married again to a woman he had previously lived with. He did this to protect their daughter's good name.

QUEER USES OF WORDS. Curious Expressions Peculiar to the North and South.

Rebecca Hart in the Chuatauquan.

It seems the most natural thing in the world for a southerner in calling another person to saying, "Ho! John," which we never do say. Another southern expression which always word "mighty" as an adverb. But to those accus-

King Milan's Divorce.

Vienna Correspondence London Times. King Milan has been privately doing his uthaving declared that he will retain his office. Should the metropolitan hold firmly to this resolution the schemes of the queen's friends will receive a check, but the consequences to the internal peace of the country may be serious, for sharp conflict must arise between the cabinet and the regency. Archbishop Michael claims his restoration to the metropolitan see as a matter of right, alleging that his deposition was illegal, and this opinion is supported not only by the radical ministers, but by one of the regents. Gen. Beli Markovitch. On the other hand, M. Ristitch and Gen. Protitch, who took the king's side in the divorce question, are included in the death of the first Mrs. Heffner she became Mrs. Heffner, No. 2. The exiled bishops, Jeronimus and Moisje, who it will be recollected denied the king's right to a divorce, are to return to Servia at the same time as Archbishop Michael, and the public demonstrations in their honor will have an official character, for the ministers intend to take part in them, and are encouraging the local authorities to do the same. Should the ex-metropolitan not be at once restored to the primacy, he will take up his residence in his old house at Vratchare, near the Belgrade, and there, as his friends say, "wait for events." From the moment of his return the position of M. Ristitch will not be enviable. In fact, with the cabinet, the queen, the church, and the mass of the people against him, M. Ristitch already stands in much the same difficulty as those which drove King Milan to abdication.

A strange rumor has been circulated that King Milan intends to retire into a monastery at Jerusalem, with the intention of many contents. The London Times and Standard to appoint Prince Albert Victor viceroy of Ireland, says the Irish people care very little whether the office of viceroy be abolished or not, nor does it matter to them who comes to the castle to assume the duties given up in disgust by Lord Londonderry; but a shadow prince in Dublin castle would be the worst of all appointments. If the Prince of Wales himself should undertake to perform in Ireland the social duties he so felicitously discharged in England perhaps the change would be for the better, but a boy kinglet and a bread-and-buttion linked with 10,000 shams and crimes. A Paris Version of the Meyerling Tragedy Cablegram to the New York Sun.

Perhaps the most remarkable story of all concerning the Meverling tragedy is that which has just reached Paris. So many "true stories" have been published about the mysterious death of Crown Prince Rudolph and Baroness Vetsera that it was thought all conceivable personage in Vienna, whose relations with the ple. At about the same time, Madame Judic, who was playing in the Austrian capital, became possessed of a similar story from two men of notable rank who are more or less in her train. This story she told in full to Maurice

The queer story is as follows: A few days ago mind reader. He was originally an exposer of spiritualism, and afterward became interested Meyerling. Until that time it was known that the count had disappeared, but nobody knew where he was. After his death he was buried without ceremony. The cause of his death was variously given, but there was nothing in the newspapers, and the count was buried before even the papers knew of his death.

IN LOVE WITH HIS NIECE. The accepted story now is that the count was in love with his own niece, Baroness Marie Vetsera. She was, as is now well known, a woman of singular and remarkable beauty, and the passion which she inspired in her uncle was apparently of the most violent nature. He was of Hungarian descent and a man of strong will power. The family objected to an alliance between niece and uncle, but the latter insisted upon having his way. Meanwhile he watched the baroness closely and was the first man outside of the personal attendants of the personal atten crown prince to learn of the liaison between the heir to the Austrian throne and his niece. He said nothing but watched the pair nar-rowly, and when the crown prince left the ambassador's ball to drive out to Schloss Meyerling the count followed in a close carriage. He did not attempt to enter the house where the lovers were until very late at night. When he got into the prince's bedroom and found the couple together there was a sharp altercation. The count, in a fit of jealous fury, attempted to shoot the crown prince, but the first bullet killed the baroness. In the strug-gle for the weagon which followed a portion of the count's hand was blown off, and it was from the effects of this wound that he subsequently died, through blood poisoning. The crown prince was of light build and totally unarmed. The count shot him just as the attendants ran say, "O, John!" but it always seems to amuse into the room. Every effort was made to hush our friends across the way. It is the "O" that excites their merriment, and in attempting to one of the rooms upstairs and put under guard give the peculiarity they often represent us as pending instructions from the emperor. He went into a delirium in the course of the night and never left the room alive. The story is worth telling because it is the one which is now sounds queer to northern ears is the use of the believed, but no man's ingenuity can forecast the next history of the mystery of Meyerling.
